History of Spanish Language

Many of you have heard so much about how Spanish from Spain and Spanish from Latin America are different and worry about that you will not be understood if you travel to these countries having learn Latin American Spanish.

While the comparison isn't completely accurate, the differences between Spanish from Spain and Spanish from Latin America are something like the differences between British English and American English. People from throughout the Spanish-speaking world can communicate with other as easily as people throughout the English-speaking world can.

There are differences in the spoken language but the writing is the same. I call this differences "accents" but they aren't so extreme that they prevent communication. You will learn how to differentiate them when you visit Spanish speaking countries.

Standard educated Spanish is understood anywhere in the Spanish-speaking world, and people from main Spanish speaking cities speak good Spanish. If your Spanish pronunciation is reasonably good, whether your accent is Castilian or Mexican or Peruvian, you will be understood. Latin Americans watch movies from Spain, and Spaniards watch Latin American soaps so you can see that the differences aren't huge.
